

SAMHSA's mission is to reduce the impact of substance abuse and mental illness on America's communities.

About SAMHSA

The Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) is the leading agency within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services working to reduce the impact of behavioral health conditions (mental and/or substance use disorders) on America's communities.

SAMHSA provides leadership and devotes its resources—programs, policies, staff time and expertise, information and data, contracts, and grants—toward helping the nation act on the knowledge that:

- behavioral health is essential for health;
- prevention works;
- treatment is effective; and
- people recover.

SAMHSA's goal is to ensure that all Americans enjoy a high-quality, self-directed, satisfying life in a community of their choice. Substance use disorders, addiction, poor emotional health, and mental illness take a toll on the health of individuals, families, and communities. SAMHSA provides critical support services for individuals and families in emotional distress or who need help locating treatment for mental and/or substance use disorders. See reverse side of this flyer for more information.

SAMHSA Grants

Did you know that in 2014, SAMHSA awarded up to $1.4 Billion in funding for programs that build resilience and facilitate recovery for people with, or at-risk for, a behavioral health condition? SAMHSA has a variety of grant funds available for states, territories, tribal organizations, and local communities through:

- Center for Substance Abuse Prevention
- Center for Substance Abuse Treatment
- Center for Mental Health Services
